INNOVATIONS IN CHILD CARE

A handbook of child care innovations and resources

Prepared by the Community Care Licensing Division of the California Department of Social Services

"Promoting healthy, safe and supportive community care"

JUNE 1999
This Handbook was prepared by the California Department of Social Services, Community Care Licensing Division, Child Care Advocate Program. It is designed to provide child care planning councils, businesses, child care providers, families, resource and referral agencies, elected officials, and others with information about the range of child care programs designed to address specific local needs. It outlines California's major child care organizations and over 50 individual child care programs, including the specific services, funding sources, innovative features and contacts for more information.

Our hope is to provide you with a dynamic resource guide. Please contact your Child Care Advocate to comment, add, or request updated information. A tear out sheet is provided at the back of this book for your input on additional innovative programs.

California's population and economy continue to expand and the demand for quality child care also continues to grow. California’s Department of Social Services licenses and monitors child care homes and centers through the Community Care Licensing Division. The division’s Child Care Advocate Program works in collaboration with parents and California’s diverse communities to increase the quality and availability of child care.

The Advocate Program has designed this handbook as a resource guide for child care planning councils, businesses, child care providers and elected officials. It describes a wide range of innovative programs currently addressing specific child care needs. Outlining the functions of major child care organizations and agencies, it also describes more than 50 individual child care programs, including their specific services, innovative features and names of contacts for more information.

We want to commend the California child care providers who have developed these innovative programs. We appreciate their willingness to share information about their programs through this document and to respond to questions or contacts from persons seeking to meet local child care needs.

Please contact your area’s Child Care Advocate to comment, contribute information or request information on other child care innovations. We value your input in making this handbook an up-to-date and useful tool for increasing the availability and diversity of child care in California.

Sincerely,

Rita Saenz, Director

COMMENT SHEET ............................... 55
As welfare reform impacts our state, the availability and diversity of child care options must respond. Many working parents will need child care in non-traditional settings and during irregular hours. Seasonal care, rotating schedules, sick children, backup care for emergencies and drop-in care are also part of the fabric of child care for a record number of working parents.

We anticipate substantial opportunities in California for growth in all types of child care arrangements. This handbook provides a starting point for potential child care professionals, employers and service organizations interested in meeting the emerging needs of families.

Much can be learned from providers already established in the child care profession. In the Child Care Innovations section of this handbook we include contacts and descriptions for innovative programs. These providers are willing to share their experience to assist you in obtaining first-hand information for developing similar or new programs in your area. Consult the Resource Directory for important support services available through our state’s numerous, multi-faceted communities.
Licensed

There are two types of licenses for child care facilities in California:

Child Care Centers — typically operated outside the licensee's home. Child care centers provide child care and supervision to infants, toddlers, preschoolers or school-age children. Centers are usually in public buildings. They are located in schools, church facilities and a variety of other settings. Depending on its usable indoor space, the number of restrooms and the size of the outdoor play space, centers can care for virtually any number of children. Separate licenses are required to care for infants, preschool, and school age children, although care for all three age groups can be provided at a single site. Qualified teachers for centers that care for infants or preschoolers must have completed at least 12 units of Early Childhood Education. For centers with a license for school-age children, the course work may be in other subjects more appropriate for the care of older children.

Family Child Care Homes — always operated in the licensee's own home. Family child care homes are in residential settings and provide a home-like environment. Homes may be rented, owned or leased. Family child care can include care provided in mobile home parks and apartment buildings as well. Small family child care homes can care for up to eight children. Large homes can care for up to 14 children when the care provider has the help of an assistant. The number of children counted in small and large family child care homes includes the licensee's children who are under the age of 10. Family child care homes may care for infants, toddlers, preschoolers or school-age children, and often serve a mixture of these groups.
License Exempt

Unless specifically exempted by statute or regulations, arrangements for providing child care are required to be licensed by the California Department of Social Services. The following settings are exempted from needing a license:

Relative Care — care provided by a parent, stepparent, grandparent, aunt, sister, etc. Care can be in the relative’s or the child’s home. Any number of children can be in care as long as they are all related. For example, a parent has 2 adult children, each of whom has 3 minor children; the grandparent cares for all 6 grandchildren. Such an arrangement does not require a license.

Cooperative Care — care provided by the parents of the children. This type of care arrangement is for no more than 12 children, and each parent or set of parents rotates as the care giver for all the children. No money is exchanged for the care which can be provided in a home or a commercial building.

Care for One Family — care provided in the home of the care provider for the children of one family not related to the care provider. The care provider may be taking care of their own children as well. As with relative care, there is no limit on the number of children receiving care, as long as they are from one other family only.

Public Recreation Programs — recreational programs operated by any public entity, often a city, county, or school district. The program must be operated only during the hours school is not in session and must be for children of kindergarten age and above. The program must operate for 16 hours or less per week, or for a total of 12 weeks or less in any one year. Recreation programs can also accept children not yet in kindergarten who are at least 4 years and nine months of age, as long as the program operates for less than 16 hours per week or no more than 12 weeks during any given year. Children under 4 years and nine months may also attend recreation programs as long as no child attends any program for more than 12 hours per week and more than 12 weeks in a given year.

Extended Day Care — care provided to school-age children by a public or private school. Usually, this exemption is for the children who attend a public or private school, and receive care after school at the school site. The after school program is exempt if the school is responsible for the entire program, including employing the staff who operate the program.
Parents-on-Site Child Care — care offered for parents on a short-term basis, usually no more than a few of hours, while the parents are participating in an activity such as bowling or physical fitness. Parents must be readily available on the premises at all times. Care for children in shopping centers, malls or ski resorts is required to be licensed because parents are not readily available and could leave the area for extended periods of time.

Nanny Care — care arranged for children in their own home. A nanny hired by the child’s parents to provide care in the child’s own home would not be required to be licensed. If the nanny were to care for other neighborhood children, the care arrangement would no longer be exempt and would require licensure as a child care center (care outside of the care provider’s own home).

Parents in School or Adult Education Child Care — care for children on a school premises while the parent is attending school. Child care provided at a school site when the parent is attending classes on the same premises, and the school is operated by (or contracted to operate by) a public school district, is exempt. As with temporary, short term care, the parent must be readily available.

One-Day-A-Week Care — programs that operate one day per week for four hours or less. These short-duration programs are often arranged by groups of parents, or by church groups, to provide a bit of respite for parents in the community. Parents may, but are not required, to serve as the care providers.

Instructional Child Care — offer instruction to school-age children for not more than 30 consecutive days during school vacations or breaks. Such programs include bible schools and summer craft schools. Children younger than school-age can also attend for up to 15 consecutive days.

Activities-Based Child Care — recreational programs, similar to those found at public parks or schools during the summer. Activities-based child care is exempt if children can come and go at their will, and there is no monitoring as to attendance or length of stay. In these programs, children are supervised only to the extent that they do not injure or harm themselves while participating in the activities offered. Such activities may include soccer, baseball, softball, or arts and crafts. Centers that provide drop-in care for younger children while parents are shopping or involved in other activities must be licensed.

Although the above programs are not required to have their staff screened by Licensing, checks of criminal and child abuse histories can be obtained through TrustLine (described on Page 12 of this handbook).
Unlicensed (Illegal)

Safe, quality child care is a public policy priority in California. License requirements provide health and safety protections for children at the care setting, require criminal record background checks for all care providers, and establish educational qualifications for teachers and directors of child care centers.

If not specifically exempted as described previously, care and supervision of children without a license is illegal. Unlicensed care providers can receive a civil penalty or misdemeanor citation. Direct questions regarding whether a child care arrangement requires a license should be directed to the local Licensing district offices (listed in this handbook's Resource Directory).
CHILD CARE SUBSIDIES

Two primary agencies provide child care subsidies to low-income and welfare families: the California Department of Education, and the California Department of Social Services. The dual goals of both California Department of Education and California Department of Social Services are to support quality child care that prepares children for success in school and to help families achieve self-sufficiency.

California Department of Education — administers many State and federal programs that assist low-income families to pay for child care. Through the Child Development Division, the California Department of Education also is the lead agency in California for administering the federal Child Care and Development Block Grant.

California Department of Social Services — operates child care payment programs so parents on welfare can work, attend school or training. Through its Welfare to Work Division, Child Care Programs Bureau, the Department administers subsidized child care programs through the State’s 58 county welfare departments.

Welfare related child care programs are being consolidated into a three-stage system. This will provide seamless access to child care for poor families extending from their time on welfare until they become self-sufficient and exceed 75% of the State’s median income.

STAGE ONE

Families on welfare whose need for child care is unstable or limited term. Examples include families which have recently or not yet obtained employment or are involved in short-term job search or training programs. County welfare departments administer the child care program during this stage.

STAGE TWO

Welfare families whose need for child care has become more stable, or who have recently moved off welfare. Other parents may be in long term training programs or employed, while still being eligible for welfare. Families who have left welfare may be eligible to continue to receive child care in this stage for an additional twenty-four months. Under this stage, child care is administered by the Alternative Payment Program agency, which may include a county welfare department that has contracted with the California Department of Education, Child Development Division.

STAGE THREE

Families whose income level does not exceed 75% of the State’s median income. Families with earned income will be expected to share in child care costs, depending on income level. Child care is administered by Alternative Payment Program agencies that are not county welfare departments. Funding for this stage is more limited, and families may be put on waiting lists until opportunities become available.
Access to the State’s various child care subsidy programs has been limited, due to varied eligibility criteria, and funding issues. Subsidized care currently helps offset costs for over 170,000 children of low-income families. However, there are many other families who could benefit from the availability of subsidized care. The new collaborative programs jointly administered by the California Department of Education and the California Department of Social Services are intended to make child care available to the maximum number of families. Child care agencies are now actively involved in activities to expand child care capacity, and to streamline procedures to make the system truly seamless for families.

The California Department of Education, as lead child care agency, develops a coordinated child care State plan, including programs for subsidies and quality improvement activities. This plan is developed in conjunction with the California Department of Social Services, local child care planning councils, resource and referral agencies, Alternative Payment Program agencies programs and other child care stakeholders.

ALTERNATIVE PAYMENT PROGRAMS

Alternative Payment Programs contract with the California Department of Education to provide subsidies for the cost of child care. Subsidies are available for care provided in private centers, family child care homes and certain license-exempt child care settings. This subsidy usually takes the form of a monthly “vendor” payment to the provider selected by the family.

Under California’s child care system, parents have full responsibility to select child care arrangements that meet their own unique needs and desires. Parents who want help choosing a child care setting for their child are offered assistance. Some provider education may also be offered.

County welfare departments (see Stage One child care under the previous section) offer a similar vendor-voucher program. Some counties have also contracted with the California Department of Education to operate a local Alternative Payment Program agency. Most Alternative Payment Programs are co-located with local resource and referral agencies.

CHILD CARE LICENSING

In addition to subsidizing various child care programs, the California Department of Social Services, through the Community Care Licensing Division, licenses and monitors child care centers and family child care homes. Licensing requirements are listed in Title 22, Division 12 of the California Code of Regulations. The regulations provide a good overview of some of the important considerations for opening and operating a child care facility. They discuss admissions policies, daily practices and procedures, emergency planning, facility design and structure, outdoor space, equipment, meals, disease prevention, background clearances (criminal records and child abuse reports), staff qualifications and adult-child ratios.

There are 13 child care licensing offices located throughout the State. License applications for all centers and most family homes are processed through those offices (except for certain counties that contract to perform licensing services; see below). Licensing staff in each office will also conduct orientations for prospective applicants for a license, monitor licensed facilities through unannounced visits, investigate complaints about licensing violations, institute action to remove licenses as necessary, and collaborate with local professional and public agencies in promoting quality child care in their communities.

A listing of the 13 Licensing District Offices is included on pages 50–51 in this handbook's Resource Directory.

Ten counties contract with the California Department of Social Services so that county staff perform the licensing and monitoring of family child care homes in their respective areas. Information about these homes should be directed to the county welfare department. The ten counties are Del Norte, Fresno, Inyo, Marin, Mendocino, Sacramento, Santa Cruz, Sutter, Tehama and Yolo.

A listing of the 58 county welfare departments is included on pages 52–54 in this handbook's Resource Directory.
The Child Care Advocate Program is an independent body within the Community Care Licensing Division. Formerly called the Child Care Ombudsman Program, it was established by legislation passed in 1984.

Child Care Advocates facilitate the interchange of ideas and information regarding child care at the neighborhood, county, and State levels. As part of the Advocacy and Policy Branch, Child Care Advocates provide mediation services to child care facilities in their dealings with the licensing program. Although locally accessible in the district offices, the Child Care Advocates report centrally to a program manager in Sacramento.

With the advent of welfare reform, Advocates are now charged with supporting efforts to build capacity to accommodate the increased need from welfare families, and to promote quality environments. These efforts are geared to the continued development of pace-setting options and programs that keep California in “the top 10” states nationwide for quality child care. Child Care Advocate responsibilities include:

1. Facilitate activities to increase child care availability and retain current child care providers, in support of the State’s new CalWORKs program for welfare families;
2. Promote child care quality by managing the California Department of Social Services funding programs for quality improvement and by supporting local efforts to improve quality and educate child care consumers;
3. Provide information to the general public on licensing standards and regulations;
4. Be a liaison between Licensing and local businesses, labor, law enforcement, education groups, child care providers and consumers;
5. Disseminate information on the State’s licensing role and activities, child care resource and referral agencies, and other child care programs;
6. Provide resource and referral agencies with current information on licensing regulations, procedures, violations, revocations, and activities;
7. Investigate and resolve concerns communicated on behalf of children served by a child care facility; and
8. Mediate disputes between Licensing district offices and licensees alleging misapplication of regulations (after initial appeal rights have been exercised).

A listing of the 13 Child Care Advocate offices is included on pages 50–51 in this TRUSTLINE

Child care providers in licensed homes and centers must receive a criminal record clearance as part of the licensing process. TrustLine is the California Department of Social Services’ registry of all other types of (license exempt) in-home child care providers who have passed a background screening. All caregivers listed with TrustLine have been cleared through a fingerprint check of records at the California Department of Justice. This means they have no criminal convictions or substantiated child abuse reports in California that indicate they should not be providing care for children.

Employment agencies are also required by law to register their child care providers with TrustLine upon placement. Before TrustLine, parents and others using babysitters and private nannies could not know if the person to whom they were entrusting the care of their child had a criminal or child abuse history.

Anyone can check if a provider is registered on TrustLine by calling the 800 number listed below and giving the person’s full name, driver’s license number or other approved identification. If your care giver or the one you are interviewing is not registered, just call TrustLine to learn how they can apply. Nearly all child care providers who receive a child care subsidy either from the California Department of Education or the California Department of Social Services are required to be cleared through the TrustLine registry. TrustLine is continually updated and care givers who have committed a subsequent crime will be removed.

Registration is simple. Providers complete a one-page application and send it, along with a set of fingerprints, to the address listed below. There is a one-time, processing fee.

HEAD START

In 1965, the federal government established the Head Start program as part of the "War on Poverty." Head Start child care homes and centers have been widely recognized as providing effective preschool care for three and four year old children of low-income families. Head Start is a program model that provides a comprehensive range of services for the child and family including services to meet their emotional, social, health, nutritional, and psychological needs. A major component of the program is an emphasis on parent participation (to the extent allowed by their jobs or training programs).

Programs vary from part-day to extended-day (6 AM to midnight) and are offered on schedules that coincide with the school year. Ten percent of enrollment is reserved for children with special needs. Some programs use centers, some use family child care homes as well. Public schools or private nonprofit agencies generally operate Head Start programs.

Head Start now serves over 750,000 children and their families each year in urban and rural areas in all fifty states, the District of Columbia and the U.S. Territories, including many Native American and migrant children. In 1998, there were 72,606 children being served in 1,583 Head Start child care centers and homes throughout California.

As welfare to work programs expand under CalWORKs, Head Start is partnering with other community agencies to develop new programs to meet family needs for non-traditional child care, and to assist in efforts to move poor families to a level of self-sufficiency.

RESOURCE & REFERRAL AGENCIES

Publicly funded Resource and Referral agencies (R&Rs) are located in every county in California. There are currently 90 R&R offices operating throughout the state. Their services to parents, providers, businesses and others concerned about child care include:

- Assisting parents in locating and choosing child care in their area
- Providing general information about licensing procedures and regulations
- Recruiting, training and providing technical support to child care providers
- Conducting workshops for parents and providers
- Providing resources on quality child care (literature, toy lending libraries, video tapes)
- Administering or referring to subsidized food programs
- Requesting TrustLine clearances for families utilizing license exempt child care who are interested in determining if baby-sitters are free of criminal records or substantiated child abuse complaints
- Processing fingerprints for in-home and license exempt subsidized child care providers.

R&Rs provide information describing the community’s child care services and delivery system. They help identify and target child care needs in the community and focus efforts to recruit new providers into the area. Working closely with other agencies involved in child care, R&Rs collaborate on efforts to develop community-based solutions to local child care issues.

Families are given information on care providers in their area. R&Rs assist the families in determining which type of child care best suits the family’s particular needs and counsels parents on how to choose care. Families may choose to focus their child care search on geographic proximity to work, home, or school. Families may receive program-specific information regarding child care homes and centers, including such things as homes with large yards, child care that includes pets, bilingual or multigenerational child care, and experience with children with special needs.

Private, for-profit Resource and Referral agencies are operated in some areas, but are not affiliated with State sponsored programs.

Many families in today’s society find that it is necessary for both parents to work, and in single parent families it is usually essential. This means that more and more of California’s children are being cared for by someone other than Mom or Dad. Add to this the anticipated need for child care for welfare participants transitioning into the workforce, and the result is an increased demand for child care. In response to this need, California agencies statewide are engaged in efforts to expand the child care delivery system and enhance its quality.

Currently, California ranks among the top ten percent of the states for provision of good child care. As more care providers are needed to meet the demands of working parents, we want to ensure that California’s child care continues to be the best possible. This will necessitate continued improvements in mainstream programs and special efforts focused on meeting the needs of families for non-traditional types of care. Infant care, sick child care, care for children with special needs, and care during non-traditional night and weekend hours is needed. Counties and local communities are searching for innovative and effective ways of addressing these needs.

A shared goal of the State, counties, and local communities is to encourage more people to consider child care as a career. The State and counties have programs underway which offer training for those interested in becoming new providers, often at no cost. The goal is to enable individuals to enter the child care field equipped to provide quality care and innovative programs to California’s children. Additional assistance in getting started in child care is available through many of the agencies and organizations listed in the Resource Directory at the back of this guide.

On the following pages you will find a sampling of various innovative programs which have stretched beyond the norm to meet the child care needs of all kinds families. The programs described represent the new types of child care which will be needed most. Our intent is to offer a guide to you, the potential care giver, so that you may explore the many opportunities and innovations which exist in child care. For your convenience, a contact person, phone number and address are included with most of the listings.

Program Description: Many of the children attending during the week are children with special needs. Such families requested that the center also provide day respite on Saturdays and Sundays.
Churches can often provide child care in a classroom-like setting by converting Sunday school rooms to child care rooms during the week. Churches may also have outside areas that meet play space requirements. As a result, start-up costs are often greatly reduced for the child care facility, which is often a stumbling block for new facilities. Church sponsored child care is often viewed as a service to the local community and is part of the mission of a church committed to assisting those in need. Clergy and church staff provide child care as an essential part of a family’s life in their church community.

COOPERATIVES

Child care cooperatives are operated by groups of parents who share child care duties and responsibilities. Such arrangements support the concept of parent involvement in caring for their children in pre-school settings. Child care cooperatives, or “co-ops” can also lower child care costs.

Parents volunteer their time, either by acting as a teacher or assisting in the operation or maintenance of the facility. Contracts of Participation ensure that all parents contribute their time and effort evenly. Co-ops are frequently located in churches or schools.

Some cooperatives are exempt from licensure and others require a license, depending on the extent of each parent’s involvement in the care and arrangements for payment. Community Care Licensing’s district office staff can quickly help you determine if a license would be necessary.

CRISIS CHILD CARE

Families faced with a crisis are often unable to deal with the situation without help. Parents who enroll in a drug rehabilitation clinic, or homeless families who reside in a temporary shelter, will want their children to be in a safe and healthy environment. Other times a parent may simply feel overwhelmed, or have other emotional, mental or physical difficulties that make caring for a child difficult or impossible. Crisis child care assists them to get through the situation and return to normal lives.

DROP IN

Drop-in child care operates on an occasional basis, for parents who may need care while engaged in other activities such as shopping, bowling, skiing, etc. Drop-in facilities may be licensed or license-exempt depending on a number of factors, including whether or not parents are readily available in cases of emergency. This type of care is not offered as the regular ongoing care for any one child. Drop-in facilities are not required to keep files regarding children’s immunizations or other child care records. If a license is required, certain licensing standards are modified to accommodate the unique program needs.

Program Description: This drop-in center provides care for children of tourists and casino workers from Stateline, Nevada. Tourists must call ahead to book reservations for their children and need to bring immunization records to the center at the first visit. Child care for children of casino employees is generally not considered drop-in care, so there is a mix of children who attend the center regularly and drop-in tourist care.
Employer sponsored child care is generally arranged on or near the parent’s work site. Employers may contract with a licensed child care center nearby, or may make space available for a child care center at the site and operated by the employer. A good information source on employer sponsored child care is available from “One Small Step” (see this handbook’s Resource Directory). Your local Child Care Advocate, also listed in the Directory, is another resource for information about employer sponsored child care.

Sometimes called emergency care, this type of care is set up to assist an employee-parent when their regular child care falls through due to provider illness, vacations, or a provider's own family emergency. The employer contracts with a child care center or a family child care home to provide child care and usually pays all or a part of the child care fee. These arrangements are offered as an employee benefit that also helps the employer by reducing absenteeism.

Community Care Licensing recognizes the need for special consideration when locating a center in an area of corporate businesses. For example, in the Los Angeles center, approval has been given for a fenced walkway to an outdoor playground adjacent to the property. There are no signs or internal walls, and a security guard, panic buttons, intercom, closed-circuit videos and double-locked entrance areas all create a highly secure setting. The contact persons can give you details regarding how a company can become a member.

FAMILY CHILD CARE NETWORKS

Family child care networks provide off-site child care through sub-contracts with licensed family child care homes or centers. Network affiliated facilities provide infant, toddler or preschool care.

Children may transfer between facility types, as their developmental needs may dictate. For example, a child placed in family child care may transfer to a center if experience in a larger group is desired. In the case of infants, they must be two years of age before they can be enrolled in a center pre-school.

HOUSING-COMPLEX BASED

Child care can be established to serve a specific residential area, an apartment complex or other congregate housing facility, or a Section 8 housing development. Every state and entitlement city is required to have a Consolidated Plan to establish priorities for the use of federal housing funds and the Community Development Block Grant funds. Collaboration between child care providers and housing developers increases the quality and stability of child care facilities and the communities in which they are located.

Children with severe injuries or contagious infections should not be involved in child care. However, some children who are mildly ill can still attend, but should not participate in normal, everyday child care activities. If care for ill or injured children is to be provided in a child care center, additional licensing considerations are applied. In a family child care home, the provider needs to assure that other children are physically separated to avoid the spread of illnesses.

Unless given authority to license child care on federal property, child care facilities at these locations are not licensed by Community Care Licensing. Base commanders must authorize access and jurisdiction on military bases. Federal authorities require centers and homes located on their property to meet federal licensing standards that, in most respects, equal California’s standards.

PILOT STUDIES

State child care agencies, as well as other child care stakeholders, are reviewing ways to address the increasing need for infant care in our communities. With welfare reform, the demand is expected to grow as more parents of small children enter the workforce. Some concepts call for legislative authority to temporarily waive certain laws or regulations. Pilot studies are sometimes effective ways to test the safety and developmental appropriateness of such waivers.
