Ready to have your students debate on the effect of the Economy on Elections, or the political and economic forces at play in resolving the strategic interactions among the various interests?

An interdisciplinary approach to economics and civics, participants will be introduced to public choice economics, a subfield of economics that studies voting methods, elections, and public policy making through the lens of economics. This workshop will also highlight the economics embedded in the U.S. constitution, institutions of the U.S. government, and key historical moments through the economics perspective.

Teaching Opportunity

FTE

A great opportunity for beginning or returning teachers to economics.

This workshop will provide teachers solid foundation for teaching the concepts covered in high school economics course. Participants will be introduced to lessons that cover the typical 4-unit economics course using dynamic simulations, pedagogy, and supporting curriculum.

Units covered include, but not limited to, Basic Economic Principles, Microeconomics, Macroeconomics and International Economics, with integration of personal finance and other student-specific applications.

Participants will be active learners and leave with a toolbox of how to better provide students with a self-contained opportunity to attain a deeper understanding and working knowledge economics concepts.
