Letting Questions Lead the Way

Rigorous, Higher-Order Questions and Discussions Meeting
the Expectations of the California Common Core State Standards

Appropriate for all content areas

Questions play an important role in every classroom, and in life. Questions are the catalyst for curiosity, engagement, ownership, & deeper learning. They help create a safe learning environment that values different perspectives and lead to students feeling empowered to contribute.

This workshop will examine questions that shift students from being passive participants to active learners. Participants will engage in questioning techniques and discussion-based learning activities geared to promote collaboration and applicable for classroom implementation. Learn how to plan and use thought-provoking questions throughout the lesson to:

- encourage higher order thinking that lead to outcomes that require application and synthesis,
- utilize effective response strategies that involve all students in answering, and
- use wait time and follow-up strategies to support quality answers.
