The work of actively opposing racism by advocating for changes in political, economic, and social life.

(Race Forward/Racial Equity Tools Glossary)

"To be antiracist is to think nothing is behaviorally wrong or right -- inferior or superior -- with any of the racial groups. Whenever the antiracist sees individuals behaving positively or negatively, the antiracist sees exactly that: individuals behaving positively or negatively, not representatives of whole races. To be antiracist is to deracialize behavior, to remove the tattooed stereotype from every racialized body. Behavior is something humans do, not races do." (Ibram X. Kendi, How to be an Antiracist)
Defining RACIAL JUSTICE

Racial justice is the systematic fair treatment of people of all races, resulting in equitable opportunities and outcomes for all. Racial justice — or racial equity — goes beyond “anti-racism.” It is not just the absence of discrimination and inequities, but also the presence of deliberate systems and supports to achieve and sustain racial equity through proactive and preventative measures.

Defining ANTI-ASIAN RACISM

racism a system of oppression based on race

anti-Asian racism: a system of oppression based on race that is specific to Asian peoples, phenotype, culture, and concepts about what ‘Asian’ means

Advocating for educators and schools to pay more attention to the needs of Asian American students is tricky...why?
Advocating for educators and schools to pay more attention to the needs of Asian American students is tricky...why?

Undercurrent of Model Minority Logic
- “Well, what particular needs do they have?”
- “Are they really suffering from any serious problems?”
- “Should our limited resources really go toward Asian Americans?”

→ Do not merit attention like other minority groups

⭐ Asian Americans are not as deserving of institutional attention as Black and Brown students.

⭐ Asian Americans, even if relatively academically successful, are regarded as less than culturally “ideal” students.
How can we make sense of anti-Asian racism in a way that challenges two things:

1. a zero-sum mindset of institutional resources, and
2. white dominance?
How should we think about Asian Americans in a world grounded in white dominance and anti-Blackness?

1. Introduction

Recently, the call to go “beyond Black and White” in discussions of race has become something of a mantra in scholarly circles. The conventional trope of “two nations, Black and White”—crafted and reproduced over the past half-century by Gunnar Myrdal, the Kerner Commission, Andrew Hacker, and others—seems increasingly outdated as unprecedented levels of Asian and Latin American immigration continue to diversify the U.S. population. While the multiracial composition of the American populace has always given the lie to a bipolar racial framework, these post-1965 demographic changes have thrown the framework’s shortcomings into especially bold relief. But what does it mean to go “beyond Black and White” in thinking about race? As with most ritualistic exhortations, the need to do something is more apparent than how it is to be done.

Scholars have adopted two broad approaches to going “beyond Black and White,” both of which, in my view, have certain shortcomings. The first approach,
Kim's framework of racial triangulation:

1. introduces idea of a field of racial positions

2. argues that AAs have been located in a field of racial positions vis-a-vis Blacks and whites for a century and a half

3. thinks in terms of racial relationality

4. tracks two axes of hierarchy that shape anti-Asian racism: racial status and civic status

3. thinks in terms of racial relationality

4. tracks two axes of hierarchy that shape anti-Asian racism: racial status and civic status
Implications:
The field of racial positions and the location of Asian Americans specially—racially valorized and civically ostracized—reinforces white racial power.

Question:
How can this framework inform how we advocate for educators and schools to pay more attention to Asian American students in a way that challenges both white racial dominance and anti-Blackness?
